ROBBERS LOOTED OAK LANE HOUSE

Broke the Telephone Connection and Then Ransacked the Whole Place —Silverware and Jewelry Stolen— Burglary in Early Evening.

The home of Mrs. Rebecca Erskine, Eleventh street and Sixty-sixth avenue, Oak Lane, was ransacked by thieves and jewelry valued at about $750 and other articles were stolen. The police say the robbers had apparently been watching the house, for they waited until the family was away on Wednesday evening and then broke in by jimmying open a window in the kitchen. So far as the special officers could discover the first thing the robbers did after getting in was to break the receiver from the telephone and put the transmitter out of order.

The thieves must have been in the house at 8 o'clock when a friend of Mrs. Erskine called up and was told there was something wrong with the telephone. Closets, drawers, trunks and in fact every place where jewelry or money would be likely to be kept, were opened and the articles not wanted were scattered around the floor on the second story. Strange to say, the first floor was overlooked and in passing it over the thieves missed silverware of considerable value as well as some money.

Among the articles taken were a pair of diamond earrings, with two diamonds in each; a gold watch, studded with 15 diamonds and marked with the initials M. R. E., gold chains, a gold neck chain with amethyst setting, and a charm in the shape of a heart attached.

JENKINTOWN

FOUND DEAD ON RAILROAD.

John Oscar Hedlun, an expert rose grower on the John Wanamaker estate at Jenkintown, was found dead Tuesday morning beside the tracks of the Pennsylvania railroad near North Penn Junction. His head was badly crushed and his left foot severed. It is believed that he was either struck by a passenger train or that he fell from a car, although no conductor has reported any accident or missing passengers.

The body was found by Dominick Rockey, a trackwalker, who stopped the first-city-bound train and sent Hedlun to the Woman's Homeopathic hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

The funeral of Dr. Cross on Wednesday was largely attended.

A meeting of the Lower End Republican Club will be held this Saturday evening, J. S. Bellis' hall.

Mrs. William H. Fretz, of Jenkintown, has issued invitations for a luncheon and card party for Thursday, February 15.

WHO PAYS THE FREIGHT,

Railroad Will Sell Carload of Stone for Transportation Charges.

An unusual public sale will be held at the Fort Washington station by the railway company on Thursday, February 15, when will be exposed a carload of stone upon which the company has a lien for the costs or expenses of carriage, storage and labor bestowed thereon. The stone was shipped by F. T. Comly, of Edge Hill, to J. H. Linington, Langhorne, Pa., but before it reached there the purchaser had secured a lot of stone at a cheaper price and later upon its arrival, returned the car to Mr. Comly, who refused to accept it, and the sale is the result. Suit may be instituted for payment against Linington by Mr. Comly.

APPEALS FROM AWARDS

To Byberry and Bensalem and Hulmeville Pike Companies.

John L. DuBois, counsel for Bucks County Commissioners, on Thursday morning entered appeals in court at Doylestown, from the awards of juries in two turnpike cases where the county is called upon to pay damages.

One appeal is from the award of $4,650 to the Byberry and Bensalem Turnpike Road Company and the other is from the award of $2000 to the Hulmeville Turnpike Road Company.

SMALL FIRE AT WELDON.

A small fire at the home of Wesley Clark, a member of the Abington township police force, who lives near the Weldon hotel, occurred about seven o'clock on Wednesday evening.

The fire was thought to have started by the lounge in the dining room getting too close to the hot stove. An alarm was sounded and the Edge Hill and Weldon companies responded and quickly put out the blaze with only a small loss, considerable of which was done with water.

When the fire alarm was first sounded it was reported that the Weldon hotel was on fire.

PLANS FOR NEW TROLLEY TERMINALS

Three Lines to Centre at Chestnut Hill Park—Better Facilities for Exchanging Freight and Passengers—Wheel Pump Site Considered.

Before the opening of the summer season the cars of the Chestnut Hill division of the Reading Transit company now going to Hillcrest avenue and Germantown avenue, Philadelphia, will, instead, go direct to Chestnut Hill park, by way of a new line to be built from City Line, in order that direct connection may be made with the line of the Lehigh Valley Transit Company, as well as the Philadelphia Rapid Transit line. That is provided plans now under consideration are carried out.

Representatives of the three transit lines were at Chestnut Hill the past few days looking over the ground about the Wheel Pump hotel directly opposite the park, for the purpose of selecting a site for the erection of a large freight station, as well as an entering point to discharge and carry passengers from this vicinity.

The absence of any waiting room facilities at Hillcrest avenue, where, at present, passengers are transferred between the Schuylkill Valley and the Philadelphia Rapid Transit lines, and the necessity of another change and roundabout way for those going to or coming from points along the Lehigh Valley lines, as well as consideration for the large influx of visitors to Chestnut Hill park, have made it apparent that a radical change had to be made if either of the three lines hoped to improve public patronage.

Furthermore, the establishment of the new trolley line to Philadelphia from Norristown by the P. & W. and the growing tendency of travel to and from Philadelphia, by trolley, in order to avoid the increasing fares over the steam roads, add to the necessity of some forward step by the two existing and connecting lines between there and Philadelphia.

In addition, the establishment of the trolley freight service and the favor in which it has grown has made it imperative that there be promptly established freight facilities for this rapidly advancing service, which has found much favor with both the Philadelphia shippers, especially the truck dealers and the local merchants.

FREIGHT CAR ROBBED

Doylestown Merchants Lose Cases of Goods on Reading Railway.

When the Reading Railway freight train arrived at Doylestown station at 7.53 Wednesday morning and the cars were opened, it was discovered that one of the cars, after leaving Philadelphia Tuesday night, had been robbed. The train left Noble street station at the usual time and remained at Lansdale over night. When the car was opened at Doylestown station, the seal on the door was intact. The goods which the thieves did not want were scattered all over the floor of the car.

Among the stolen goods were packages consigned to Joseph K. Musselman, Robert L. Clymer and Walter A. Corson, Doylestown merchants, but their value or quantity cannot be learned until an investigation is made and the bills of lading checked off.

The robbed car should not have been opened from the time it left Noble street until it reached Doylestown, and the fact that the seal was not broken leads some to believe that the robbery was committed by Reading employes.

NEWMAN LEAVES JAIL.

Killed Woman, Mistaking Her for Burglar—Under $1,000 Bail.

Upon the writ of habeas corpus, issued through the efforts of Attorneys Miller & High, William Newman, colored, Willow Grove, who was committed to Norristown prison last week, was given a hearing early this week before the Court at Norristown, and discharged under $1000 bail furnished by Rahney Vogt, of Jenkintown, to appear at the March sessions of criminal court.

Newman is charged with homicide, he having, as was told in last week's issue of the Spirit, shot and killed a woman friend of the family, Miss Ethel Simms, who, unannounced, late at night entered his home on the Davisville road, and whom he mistook for a burglar.

Advertising in the Spirit Pays

J. William Alburger, of Bustleton, writes: "The Public Spirit as an advertising medium is surely a cracker-jack as my sale was largely attended and prices first class."

E. T. Kimbel, of Willow Grove, says: Kindly discontinue my ad. as chickens and guineas are sold.

Rumford & Murphy, of Willow Grove, say: Discontinue ad., houses to rent on Myers place. One insertion brought tenants for both houses.

A. Lentz, of Jarrettown: Take out ad., cow is sold.

Stephen Rumnock, of Ivyland, says please take out ad., have sold piano.

FOR A WOMAN'S NEED

By ROY NORTON

Copyright by F. L. Nelson.

JUMPED, by thunder!" was Sandy's comment as he laboriously spelled out the regulation claim notice, showing its white spot on the bark of a giant fir; "Claim's been jumped by one A. Burrows."

He leaned his axe against the foot of the tree, pushed his dingy old white hat back on his shock of brick-red hair, hitched up his trousers by the belt, and again read the notice. There was no mistaking it. There was a rival claimant for this patch of timber in the almost impenetrable wilderness of the Olympics, where for more than a year he had abided with the proud feeling of possession.

Claim-jumping, in a mining way, was not a new thing to him, but here in the big woods it seemed a little out of place. It was bewildering, and the method of its fighting would be new. He sat down on a small log and looked at the staring white sign, as if trying to read from it a solution of the difficulty. He might tear the notice off the tree, but that wouldn't do any good. Now, if only it were a mining claim, the procedure would be simple, namely, take a gun and fill the "jumper" full of lead.

Sandy straightened himself up and sighed. He had decided that this should be the method in this case, if he were driven to it.

"I'm the peacefullest cuss that ever lived," he mourned as he turned away, "but they're always gettin' me cornered where there ain't nothin' to do but shoot. Then I gets shot up some, may be, and am sorry a heap, because I had to shoot the other fellow up."

The world looked pretty forlorn to him, as he picked his way along a trail through the woods to his cabin, and for once the birds and squirrels who knew him and expected greeting were given no recognition.

His path led through timber such as but few men know; it was a Titanic forest of monstrous trees in which he wandered a pygmy. Here and there a giant had fallen, sending his three hundred feet of length crashing downward to a resting place, and presenting a twenty-foot barrier to those who would cross him in his proneness. Perhaps another giant, having lived out his life of hundreds of years, had dropped across the first, and still others piled themselves on, until the barrier was completely uncrossable.

Around one of these obstructions, the troubled Sandy came in sight of

BAD CITY BOYS RAID MEADOWBROOK

They Bring Air Rifles and Attempt to Rescue a Companion From the Children's Village—Arrested One Attempts Suicide in lock-up.

Two lads from Philadelphia got themselves into quite a scrape on Tuesday afternoon at the Seybert Village near here. The boys, whose names are William T. Sampson, of West Philadelphia, aged 13, and Max Hyman, of South Fourth street, aged 14 years, came out to the Seybert estate to add one of their former friends to escape.

They persuaded Phillip Muckttness, a former friend to go to the city with them. Before leaving the house the two boys had purchased rifles and used several of the children about the village for targets. They shot LeRoy Warnef, 8 years old, Phillip Price, 11 years old, and although the bullets did not do any vital damage the wounds are very painful.

Superintendent Lockwood heard of what was going on but the boys had gotten away by that time, however, found Muckttness at Meadowbrook station, but the other two lads had gotten on a city bound train. He then appealed to the Abington police, who phoned the police at the Reading Terminal, who arrested the lads as they stepped from the train.

They were taken to the Abington lock-up and given a hearing on Wednesday before Squire Williams and held in the detention room at the township building until Thursday when Hyman was sent to his home and the parents of Sampson came after him.

Sampson knew about the village as he had once been an inmate and was only out on parole. At the hearing the boys testified that they had worked and gotten the money to purchase the air rifles, which they had used in the shooting.

On Wednesday evening, Janitor Richardson, of the township building, heard an unusual noise in the detention room and peering in saw that young Hyman had his neck tie knotted about his neck and was climbing up a rope made of his blanket to the ceiling, to a radiator pipe in an attempt at suicide.

A DURABLE MODERN RESIDENCE.

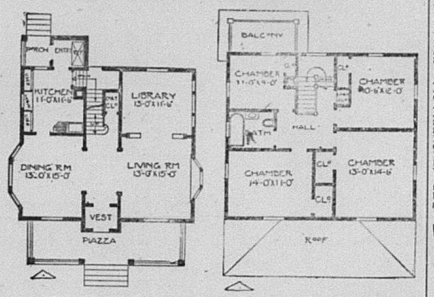
PERSPECTIVE VIEW—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.



FIRST FLOOR PLAN. SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

A very good example of the modern square house, which, though the most economical kind of a house to build, has often many commendable features. The exterior is plain, but does not lack character and will look the same for years to come. The feature of the central hall is seldom incorporated in inexpensive houses. Another good feature is the combination grade door and kitchen entrance to cellar. Size of house 28 to 32 feet over the main part. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $2,800.

By special arrangement with me the editor of this paper will furnish one complete set of plans and specifications of design No. 931 for $25.

Architect, Minneapolis, Minn.

The new club-house will be erected at Philmont, on the Philadelphia & Reading Railway, on the present site of the club, which was recently purchased. The property consists of 110 acres, and the new clubhouse will measure 60 by 160 feet, and will have a 25-foot wide porch entirely surrounding it. On the first floor will be situated the dining room, living room, kitchens, grill room and offices, while the sleeping rooms will be on the upper floors. The new building will be erected at a cost of $60,000, and work will be started in the spring.

Fairview Inn, a noted hotel in Worcestor township, Montgomery county, has been sold to Harry Krauter, of Philadelphia, for $17,500.

Wilson & Weller, York road and Wagner avenue, Logan, have sold the new store property at Rockland and Marvine streets to the Acme Tea Company which expects to occupy the property immediately. The lot is 16 feet front by 95 feet deep, and is assessed for 1912 at $3800, unfinished.

The New Hope Red-shale Brick Company has completed its arrangements for the purchase of the farm near Reeder station, belonging to the estate of Eastburn Reeder. They have also rented buildings upon the Huffnagle estate to be used as quarters for the first installment of workmen, who will occupy the same until houses are built for them to live in.

his cabin, where it nestled in a little clearing, with all its evidences of habitation. From the doorway a three-legged dog arose, and, with much effort, gave a home greeting. Even in the stress of his trouble, the tall master stopped long enough to pet the waiting head and take a kindly look into the eyes that sought his.

"Dick," he said, "we've been pards ever since I dragged you out from under a street car, way down in Seattle, and we've most always had some kind of a home since then; but now they're goin' to try to take this one away from us and make us hit the trail again."

Dick seemed to understand, although he said nothing. He was not a talkative dog, his strong point being sympathy. He felt the gravity of the situation, and hobbled after his master into the cabin.

"They you go again," Sandy reproachfully said as he entered, this time addressing his remarks to a mischievous wood-mouse who calmly sat on a shelf and looked at him while washing off with his diminutive forepaws the unmistakable signs of flour-dust from his whiskers.

"Here I lugs a sack of flour twenty miles into the woods, and you jest won't let it alone, even when I makes friends with you and feeds you till you're fat." The mouse showed no sign of fear, and with twinkling eyes continued his toilet, as Sandy, with arms akimbo, stood in front of him and delivered his scolding. "Well, you little cuss," he concluded, "you ain't like men, you don't know no better." He laid a coaxing hand on the edge of the shelf, and the mouse accepted the truce by scampering up Sandy's arm to his shoulder.

Sandy prepared his homely woodsman's meal, finished it with a woodsman's appetite, and seated himself with lighted pipe on a bench in front of his cabin. But this night there were no interludes of whistling or singing; his trouble was upon him. It seemed strange that through all the years, stretching away back to those of the desert sands, when he had been alternately packer, cowpuncher, miner, or woodsman, he who loved peace and quiet should be compelled always to fight, and fight, and fight. Now he was facing another fight. "Old Miss Trouble must have been my godmother," he said aloud, as he prepared for his night's rest. "I banker after the peaceful life, but I'm goin' to kill any damn man that tries to git this claim, an' the man might as well be A. Burrows as B., otherwise known as Sandy, Smith."

It had been many months since the heavy Colt's was taken down from its peg upon the cabin wall, but when Sandy started into the woods on the following morning, it was grimly strapped around his hip, and his belt was filled with cartridges. And this was not the last day when the gun sagged against his thigh, as he traversed his little domain, patiently waiting for the appearance of "A. Burrows."

When the time came, it was almost as a surprise. It was one bright forenoon when the air was redolent with the fragrance of bloom, and the dew lay heavily in the hollows of the tangled blackberry and rhododendron bushes, that the storm burst. Sandy had grown somewhat older in these days of waiting. His quick ear caught the unusual sound of voices, and, by the tree where the first location notice had been posted, he waited.

Through the woods, with axes gleaming across the packs on their backs, with rifles in hand, and steady tread, came four woodsmen.

"Hello!" they said, in the way of greeting to the tall, grim man who barred their way.

Sandy wasted no time in civilities. "Lookin' for this?" he queried, pointing at the white claim notice which started at them unwinkingly.

"Ef that's the Burrows location, we shore are," came the reply from the man who was evidently the leader of the party.

"Well, that's it, and ye kin save yer eyesight," said Sandy grimly. "But it ain't goin' to do ye no good, because I owns this claim, and I reckon I'm goin' to keep on ownin' it."

"The hell you are! We been sent up here to put a cabin on it, and I reckon we're goin' to keep on and do it," came the retort. "Ef there's any dispute about it, it's up to you to go to the cote and file it. We're goin' to build, and, what's more, we hev bumped into you squatters a heap o' times afore this."

The arrivals had slipped off their packs and were clustered around their leader. Sandy had held his temper well, but now "Miss Trouble" was here. He lashed out with his knotted right fist, caught the foreman a hammerlike blow on the chin, and doubled him up in the air.

A whirlwind couldn't have worked faster. The four struck at him, and kicked him, and endeavored to bring him to the ground. He felt himself being overpowered, and worked his hand to the butt of his revolver. It spoke with one quick snap, and the snarl was untangled.

One man seized a useless shoulder, through which the bullet had torn its way, and the others sprang for their weapons. Sandy tried to wing one of them, and found that his remaining cartridges were defective.

This wouldn't do. He must take to cover and put in fresh ones. He jumped, with long leaps, toward one of the barriers of fallen trees, and sought shelter. As he dropped down behind his logs, two rifle bullets sang dangerously past his head, and went "flick-flicking" through the tree tops.

Sandy stood behind a log, with feverish energy threw out the cartridges which had failed him in his need, and inserted fresh ones from his belt. Then he clambered along to a point where he could catch a sight of his battlefield, and took a survey. Not a target was in sight. He worked his way back, cut a stick, and shoved his hat upward to the top of the log, trying to draw his enemies' fire. It was effective, and the old hat went sailing to the ground behind him. He rushed to a point of observation, and took another look, but nowhere was an enemy in sight. Not even a rifle barrel protruded from behind any of the forest giants, who calmly furnished shelter.

Sandy recovered the hat, and from a new point of vantage tried his ruse. It failed to attract attention. Plainly his opponents were enemies of no mean caliber. An old trick could be played upon them once, but that was all. He must either retreat or use new tactics. The first was unthinkable, because he "never had run yit," and the second meant a reconnoiter. Sandy made his way around the thicket, and by the aid of another fallen log gained an angle, from which he peered. An elbow was in sight. He would practise on that.

"Whang" went his pistol, and the elbow lurched violently, and smothered oaths told that the shot had been well aimed. Sandy smiled. The joy of battle was on him. He felt that exultation which comes from deadly strife. He wanted to yell. It would have helped him, he felt sure. He caught sight of a head, and fired, but evidently missed. That bothered him a little. Misses were not in his line.

Once more he emptied his pistol and carefully inspected each load as he placed it in its chamber. "Too bad," he mused, "to lose that last shot! Fellers that sell no account cartridges like these ought ter have the law on 'em. Goin' ter smash that feller one, next time I see him."

Then the battle became slow. Sandy couldn't work farther around his barricade, and, peep as he would, he could catch no sight of an enemy. Well, they being the strongest, it was "up to" them to come and hunt him. He would wait.

Bees hummed busily through the air, seeking the blossoms of the woodland for the gathering of their spoil. The birds returned and began their twittering, and from off in the forest a woodpecker's hammer recommenced a tapping into the bark. In the distance the cooing of a wild pigeon lent a melancholy note. The time crept forward, and, on each side, the combatants waited for the next move. Sandy was getting restless, and had almost resolved to take a chance on creeping in a wide detour around his men, and by this flanking movement to gain a shot or two.

From back of him came a sound of footsteps, padding across the needles. He threw himself at length upon the ground and wriggled his way to a place where no shot might reach. So his enemies had "beat him to it," and were rounding him up? Woe be to the first one who came in sight! What was the fool doing, anyway?

"Whoof," came a snort from the rear. Sandy recognized the sound as being the satisfied grunt of a brown bear, who, in fancied security, had made his way to a thicket of blackberries. But what was that other sound? More footsteps, and then a louder snort from the bear, a woman's scream, and the noise of tearing thickets as the animal plunged through the underbrush in flight.

The red-headed one, forgetful of danger, with curiosity at highest pitch, his composure startled by this wonderful occurrence startled by this sound—a woman's voice—stretched his head over his rear breastwork and yelled "Hello!"

In his excitement, he raised his head too high, and a rifle ball went whizzing through the top of his hat.

Sandy ducked down, while from out in front a man's voice broke into curses directed at the one who had fired the shot.

"Can't you see," the voice expostulated, "that maybe she's in range over there—you damn fool!"

Sandy paid no heed to this remark, and it is doubtful if he even heard it, because all his attention was attracted toward the great unusual, the feminine side.

"Help! Help!" the woman's voice called. "Ugh! There was a great big bear here a minute ago, and I have fallen off a log into the bushes, and I can't get up, and there may be whole herds of bears down here in the dark, for all I can see. Why don't you help me?"

"Jest keep yer shirt on a minute," Sandy called reassuringly, "and I'll get around and help you. I'm a trifle busy out in front just now." Then he tried to make the wait easier by assuring her that the "b'ar had hiked, and there wa'n't nothin' down there to hurt her."

"But why don't you come at once?" the voice insisted.

"Got to kill a few fellers out here in front first," Sandy apologized. "Et it wa'n't for that, I'd come now."

The voice was silent for a moment, as the woman evidently tried to think over a situation that made it necessary for a man to "kill a few fellers" before coming to her aid.

"Yep," responded Sandy.

"Woman back thar!"

"Yep."

"Must be Missus Burrows. S'pose we call it quits till we talk to her."

Sandy's gun went back into his holster with a muffled snip. So this voice was Mrs. Burrows, the wife of A. Burrows, the man who was trying to rob Sandy of all he had in the world! It made no difference, she was a woman and in distress. The fight could wait. He would accept the truce; but it should be merely a truce, and no more. They couldn't have his claim.

"It's a go," he called to the enemy, and then, trusting to the chivalry of the frontier, paid no more attention to them and devoted himself to the rescue of the feminine voice.

Down in a cleft, between two great trees that had given up their lives and had sought rest on the ground, enmeshed in blackberry bushes, with torn garments and disheveled hair, he found her. She was sobbing as he came. He reassured her, and had led her from the thicket out into the open, before his late adversaries came upon them.

They grouped themselves silently around. Sandy glared at them uncompromisingly. Two of them had rudely bandaged arms, and one had the haggard look of a man who has lost much blood. Dimly the woman realized that she had interrupted a tragedy.

"Oh, you are hurt!" she said, as she looked at the men. Then, turning to Sandy, she continued: "You see, these men work for me. I bought a claim from a locator down in Seattle, and hired these men to come and build my cabin—and now—and now two of them are hurt."

She turned toward them as Sandy sternly motioned to them to keep silence. They saw from his attitude that something inexplicable had happened, and acquiesced. They stood awkwardly, while she looked from one to the other in vague questioning.

"You see, I fell, and my rifle went off—and—and, well, I got scratched jest a leetle mite," said the man with the shattered elbow, and Sandy loved him for the lie.

"Yes, jest an accident," glibly chimed in the foreman.

They looked from one to the other, and the foreman brought relief by suggesting that it was time to make camp. One man began the opening of their packs, while the wounded were cared for. Sandy took grim satisfaction from the thought that the shot that caught the elbow had been a good one. But there was the woman.

"So you are 'A. Burrows'?" he said.

"Yes. You see, my full name is Anna, but I have been writing it with the initial so long, since my husband died, that it comes natural now." And her laughter smote upon him as a blow.

Here was his enemy—a woman. And it was her men whom he had fought, and it was her claim-notice that threatened him, and she a widow who had paid money to professional locators, to put her upon his ground. Yes—his ground! Ground that he had paid for with money and labored effort, and by following the maze of the law's technicalities. "His home!" The home that he had built and loved with a tenderness that came of years of longing for it. Anyway, thinking took time, and he must find the right way out.

So Sandy told Mrs. Burrows that he had a good cabin below here, and that she must be his guest that night at least, and until her men got a camp established. He urged his hospitality, and the foreman added his insistence.

As they walked down the trail and came in sight of its homely comfort, she went into ecstacies over its trimness and picturesqueness, and over the great, majestic view of peaks and valleys that stretched away in the distance from the brow of the hill. But every word of praise, that but a few days ago would have gladdened the big man's heart, was as a knife-thrust, searching out and opening up to him those things which he had always seen and felt, but could not have put into words.

For once Dick got no word of greeting. Two big, rough hands held the head up where the eyes could be looked into, but his master was beyond words. Could he have spoken he would have said: "Dick, Dick, they want our home."

It wasn't a very reassuring tale that Sandy listened to that night, and when he went out to roll himself into his blankets beneath the stars, having surrendered his rooftree to his guest, sleep failed to close his eyelids. He was fighting a battle which must be his alone.

The widow had no other means than those which had been paid to the locators ("timber-sharks," Sandy silently called them), and had come into these solitudes to make for herself and her son a home which would render them independent, when the lumber companies came with the big mills to turn the giant trees into gold. The wait would not be long, especially as this claim was one of the most desirable in the region. Two or three years at the most, and Mrs. Burrow would be surrounded by farms instead of by forests, and she would be beyond want for life. But Sandy had seen that and more, too. For in this cabin, which rested on the hill back of him, was that consummation of his years of dreams—a "home." Every log in the humble pile had been squared with infinite care and sentiment; every shelf and homely convenience within it had carried a portion of his heart; and every "shake" in the roof had been to him but one step more toward a permanent shelter. The splendid ring of his adze had sung to him, to the tune of the wilderness, that at last his days of traveling and travail were at an end.

What should he do? What could he do? To contest the claim was, of course, to win, because his title was clear and unimpeachable. But to do so would end the dreams of a woman, a creature of the weaker sex, a portion of mankind that was to be fought for instead of against, that was to be treated tenderly and with reverence, that was unable to fight its own battles.

In the cabin, yonder, she slept, dreaming even more beautiful dreams than Sandy had ever known, of a home to be. And, worst of all, she probably thought the real owner was a "squatter," one of those shiftless, ignominious tramps of the wilderness, despised by all "homesteaders" as well as by Sandy Smith.

Dick came, and, with a cold muzzle, tried to explain that he was surprised at his own sleeplessness, and was in sympathy with his master's. And from the dog Sandy took comfort.

"You old rascal," he said, patting the head which had been laid trustingly beside his, "you're worth a dozen timber-sharks an' you don't suffer as much as lots of men. Your game ain't been an easy one, either, what with losin' your leg. Jest go to sleep and thank the Lord that you got your tail left. There's a heap o' satisfaction in bein' able to wag along."

When her men reported at the cabin door in the morning, they found it open, the morning meal out of the way, and Sandy busily making up a pack. Again he glowered at them and took satisfaction from the appearance of the bandaged ones. He clumped into the cabin and took down the moldering pack-straps from their peg, drew them tightly around his canvas-covered blankets in which were wrapped his bacon, beans, flour and tea; he added the frying pan, coffee pot and axe to the outer lashings. Then he swung the pack to his back and settled his shoulders into the arm-straps. He picked up the rifle at his feet, and stood in the cabin door.

"Missus Burrows," he said, his voice husky with emotion, "you kin have this cabin and all that's in it. It's on your land, you know, because I ain't nothin' but a squatter. Hope you like the place."

Before she could reply, he was gone out to where her men squatted on a log.

"Damn you!" he snarled as he stood before them. "Don't think I'm leavin' because there's four of you. I'm goin' on off out into the west, somewhere where there ain't no stakes, to take a new claim. An' unless it's a woman who jumps it, there ain't enough men in the Olympics to take the new claim away frum me."

The thrusting of Dick's nose into his unoccupied hand aroused other thoughts. He turned back to the open door wherein stood the woman.

"I'd be much obliged if you'd take good care of Duck fur me," he said, "because he cain't travel much. I had to lug him on my back most of the way up here, an' I've got a long ways to go—maybe the trail won't never end. Be good to him. He's a good fellow, even if he ain't got but three legs."

Then with a final scowl at the men, he swung out and into the darkness of the woods, while behind him, a crippled dog threw his head into the air and howled mournfully. It was the farewell of desolation.

Weeks of weary quest passed over Sandy's tired head. Go as he would, there was no spot open to him, no place which could be considered desirable, that welcomed him as a claimant, and no niche wherein he might with security rebuild his home. Time and again he had faced starvation, and always hardship and fatigue had been his only companions. It was useless. He had decided, with a weary heart, to make his way out of this country where everything worth having had been taken, go to Seattle, and turn his face to the far north. His route led him near the old home. He hungered for a sight of Dick and for the companionship of his great sympathetic eyes and caressing nose.

The trees took on a familiar look as he neared his old border-line, and he thought bitterly of his relinquishment of all that life had held for him there. He came suddenly on a new clearing and a new cabin, and stopped in amazement.

A sunny-faced woman stepped to the open door, and a dog sprang past her awkwardly, making his way with mouthings of welcome to Sandy's side. The man knelt on the ground and took the big, kindly beast's head in his hands, and held it against his face. Here at last was a friend.

"What did you do it for?" Mrs. Burrows asked. "The locators came the day after you left, and said that there had been a mistake, and that my claim was the one adjoining yours. They said that you clearly owned the one which you lived on and then I heard all about the fight. We tried to find you, but you had gone, no one knew where. After they had built this for me, I took care of your place, too, because both Dick and I knew you would come back some time. Why did you ever give it up? Go back to it. It's yours, and we have all been keeping it for you."

"Two of us is workin' for her now," said a man with a bandaged arm who came up, "and we want to be your friends. You're worth knowing."

Sandy, overjoyed and dazed, walked down the trail.

There before him, with freshly planted flowers in front of the cabin, and other marked evidences of improvement and attention, stood "home." In the fading light of the west, where the dying sun lighted up their snow-clad peaks and left in shadow their somber forests, stood the hills—his hills—unchanged and waiting and welcoming.

A weary man entered the silent cabin where everything stood as of old, and bowed his head upon his hands over the little pine table, while his body was shaken with sobs. And at his feet a crippled dog nestled with a great sigh of contentment.

SHE WAS SOBBING AS HE CAME.

His Idea.

"What is your idea of a really perfectly good time, Bjinks?" asked Bjonson, meeting the little chap at the club.

"Seeing my mother-in-law off to Europe for six months," said Bjinks, without any hesitation whatever.—Judge.

OAK LANE

Mr. and Mrs. James W. Phillips, formerly of Oak Lane, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Ethel Virginia Phillips, to Fred Sandborn Arnold, of Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Arthur Hood, of West Rittenhouse street, Germantown, entertained at luncheon and cards at her home last Saturday. Mrs. Hood was formerly Miss Helen Carrol, of Asbury terrace, Oak Lane.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul S. Fletcher entertained at dinner January 24, Mr. Fletcher's family and many other friends. The dining room decoration was ferns and carnations. Music, dancing and singing were kept up late. All look forward to Mrs. Fletcher regaining her health.

The Philadelphia Operatic Society's presentation of "Lucia di Lammermoor" on Thursday had a distinctly attractive feature to residents of Oak Lane, for the star part of Lucy Ashton was sung by Miss Helma Fritz, an Oak Lane girl, who is still in her teens and who, it is declared, is the youngest soprano ever selected for the part. Miss Fritz is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ludwig Fritz, of Old York road and 68th street. She has been a student of music since the age of six. Possibly her most notable effort was that of Carmen, which she sang last October. Her splendid work in Carmen led to her selection from fifty aspirants for the part of Luck Ashton.

OF INTEREST TO WOMEN.

THE NEW THINGS IN DRESS

Timely Discussion of Coming Woman's Wear.

My Dear Spirit Readers:

This is the time that the city stores are full of sales, where the early bird surely is the only one to catch the worm. It takes a woman of discretion to really get a bargain, and in many things it is better judgment to buy direct from the counter if you are not absolutely certain of what you want. For women's clothes, the most, the very most important thing is the corset. That must be good fitting and when worn with a brassiere the best results are obtained. All department stores now have fitters in this line, and a woman can try on several makes, finally selecting the best, and have that corset fitted by an expert. Or you can have your corset made to order, but this is expensive generally. The brassieres are of several varieties, muslin woven, and bands of ribbon. The muslin kind can be used instead of a corset cover if desired. Bear this in mind before you start your spring sewing, to spend your surplus money in a good corset rather than in furbelows. The underskirts are made with skant proportions and small fulness in the deep embroidered ruffles.

When it comes to dresses, the new styles are not yet settled, but the skirts will still have the straight narrow lines, although more material will be used. The one piece frocks differ but little from those we have been seeing the past year. There is some mention of tight fitting skirt around the hips with plaits from knees. Long sleeves have been much in vogue, and will be still be much used this summer, especially in thin white waists. The one new feature in waist trimming is the yoke, which is now cut on the lines of a man's white stiff bosomed shirt. While frills and plaitings are to be much used, they will not be so pronounced in width.

White is the favorite color indicated for early spring and summer, although all white is not in first favor, combining it with black or green seems to be the latest fad. White serge as well as white cloth will be largely used in suits this spring.

A few of the new gowns show wide velvet ribbon on the skirt to outline a simulated drapery. This idea will be worked out on gowns of mousseline, marquisette, taffeta and grenadine, which is again coming into fashion.

Taffeta seems to be coming to the fore again. But it is such a soft delightful goods, so different from the old-time rattling material. The materials that are all over figured have small close designs, and the polka dot, while still with us is usually small and close together. The bordered materials are coming in with the new goods, and here the dots are large, but it is the only large dot, widely spaced, that I have seen. Great quantities of beautiful reduced goods are now seen in the shops. Radium foulards have been improved, until their texture is marvelously light, and supple; yet they are more practical than ever, for they are spot proof, uncrushable and serviceable.

There is a bewildering array of lovely blouses this season. Some tailored, made of inconspicuous material that can be worn often without washing, or it can be made of dark silk, or some soft material that will not crinkle. Voiles, batistes and marquisettes are making up the bulk of white waists shown now. One finds that, while side frills are somewhat narrower and more often double or triple front frills than side frills, sleeve frills are growing more elaborate and deeper. These are of two or three inches depth.

The new straw hats are appearing, which seems most unsuitable with the zero weather we are having. The newest feature seems to be a crown trimming of bows of ribbon.

The Richelieu embroidery and the punched work that I described in a former number seem to be the craze at present. Beautiful linen gowns, table covers, pillow slips and centre pieces are shown. It is quick, fascinating work, and most easy to do. All the large department stores have an instructress in needlework, and will give you lessons in the art needle work department, free of charge.

As a last suggestion, I would say, do not overtrim. Have correct lines, and simple ones, and nothing garish in material or trimming.

A COUNTRY WOMAN.

For the Dishwasher.

Besides having a pot chain and scraper you should have thick canvas cloths for the pots and pans and separate light cloths for the finer chinaware. A rubber sponge is just the thing for greasy dishes. One of these lasts a long time and gives you such satisfaction that you will never do without one once you try them. Cake tins, patty pans and all small tinware boiled in a dishpan in the water of which a handful of soda has been thrown will become fresh and clean and as bright as new.

the KITCHEN CABINET

A little toil and a little rest,
A little more earned than spent,
Is enough to bring to an honest breast
A sing of glad content.
Am, though skies may frown or smile,
Rhtest, day by day;
Rests shall greet you after a while,
If u just keep working away.

WINTER DESERTS.

Steamed puddings are the favorii when the days grow cold and outd exercise helps us to digest morearty food. Here is one that is tot ensive but is wholly delicious:

Inn Pudding.—Scald a quart of milk, hen add a cup of corn meal; stir til scalded, then add another quart milk, a cup of suet, a cup of raisins two beaten eggs and a cup and fourth of brown sugar. Bake, stirrin constantly at first. Bake three ours.

Fresh Fruit Pudding.—Add a cup of bolses to a cupful each of suet and sor milk. Sift two cups of flour with o and a half teaspoonfuls of soda, alalf teaspoonful of cloves, half a teaspoonful of salt and a teaspoon of cinnamon. Mix well; then add three-fourths of a cup of flour mixed with a cup and a fourth of raisins, three-fourths of a cup of currants. Turn into a buttered mold and steam four hours. Serve with Sterling sauce.

Sterling Sauce.—Cream a half cup of butter, add a cup of brown sugar gradually, a teaspoon of vanilla and four tablespoonfuls of cream. Add the milk and flavoring very slowly to prevent the sauce from separating.

Fig Pudding.—To a third of a pound of chopped suet add a half pound of finely-cloped figs, two and a third cups of fine bread crumbs are soaked in a half cup of milk and added; then add two well-beaten eggs, a cup of sugar, and three-fourths of a teaspoonful of salt. Mix well and steam three hours. Serve with Yellow sauce.

Yellow Sauce.—Beat two eggs until very light, add a cup of sugar gradually and continue beating; then flavor with a teapoon of vanilla. A half cup of orange juice and a little grated rind instead of the vanilla makes a delightful sauce.

Orange Butter.—Cream a third or a cup of butter, add a cup of sugar, two beaten eggs, a half cup of milk, one and a half cups of flour and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Flavor with orange and use the yellow sauce with the orange flavor.

Nellie Maxwell.

PRETTY EVENING WAIST

This dainty waist is of pale pink mousseline de soie trimmed with bands of lace and with an embroidery in colors.

The little guimpe is of white mousseline de soie.

Attractive Negligees.

Even the realm of the negligee has been invaded by this craze for all things knitted, and among the delicate silken and lacy garments of this class are now to be found some attractive and very cozy matinees of worsted in white and pretty light shades.

Accordion plaiting is high in favor in negligees, as it preserves the slender lines while providing a desirable fullness.

The empire line is almost invariably seen in the Parisian negligees of silk and lace. The bodice part is of plain fabric and below a silken girdle a full length skirt of accordion plaiting is fastened.

Novelty Boots.

In a line of high-class novelty boots there are silk tops with patent leather, champagne kid with patent leather, and brown suede cloth, a new material that looks like the real leather, also with patent leather. Various silks are used, such as ottoman and a finer corded weave, and all the boots have from sixteen to eighteen real pearl buttons. The foxings of these shoes are straight and the heels are an inch and seven-eighths Cuban.

The best way to give some fellows a lift is by the back of the neck and the seat of the trousers.

PAPER BAG COOKING

Great System Perfected by M. Soyer, Famous London Chef.

MY EXPERIMENTS WITH PAPER BAG COOKERY.

By Martha McCulloch Williams.

When Soyer's paper bag method of cooking was first brought to my attention by friends, who, rightly or wrongly, seem to have a high opinion of my abilities as a cook, I admit that I was skeptical of its practicability. Indeed, I was more than that—I was rather firm in my belief that it could not prove out. But I was induced to put the system to a trial—and, lo and behold!—the very first trial made me an enthusiastic follower of M. Soyer. Since then I have been doing all my cooking by the Soyer method, and each succeeding day more than ever convinces me that any woman, simply by following Soyer's general directions, and using that good common sense and care which are essential to all good cooking, can master the Soyer paper bag method of cooking in a very short time, and will find it a great boon both to herself and to all the members of her household.

Following M. Soyer's general directions for paper bag cookery, I speedily learned that there are sundry commandments to be observed while pursuing his method of cooking.

The first and greatest of these is to get the right bag, which is made specially for cooking, is parafined, odorless even when crumbly-crisp, sanitary and to be had in sizes big enough to hold a Thanksgiving turkey, or tiny enough for a single chop.

Next, nearly as important, is to grease the bag inside liberally, using butter, lard, oil, drippings or a very fat rind of bacon.

Further, proportion your bag-size to what it is destined to hold. The closer the fit of bag and contents, the better, and the more even and compact the lay of the food, the less trouble in handling.

Use a footed wire broiler, or very open grid-shelf, in the oven. All paper bag cooking is done in the oven. If a gas oven, it must be lighted eight to ten minutes before putting in the food and kept at blazing heat until the bag corners scorch lightly; then slacken the heat a third or even half throughout the rest of the time of cooking.

Be sure to lay the bags in the oven with the seam uppermost, especially if water has been put inside. Seams will steam open now and then—if the opening is downward there will be a leakage and much bother.

Finally, it is important to remember that all manipulation, seasoning and flavoring of food must be attended to before it is put in bags. There can be no stirring or tossing in the course of paper bag cooking. Nor must a bag be opened at any time during cooking, such action is absolutely unnecessary if directions are faithfully followed.

A PAPER BAG DINNER.

By M. Soyer, Chef of Brooks' Club, London.

Roast Beef, Round, Ribs, or Sirloin.—Grease well with drippings, but do not season. Put in bag, lay on a wire broiler, and cook in a moderate oven. For a three-pound joint allow forty-five minutes; for seven-pound, one hour and twenty minutes.

Lima Beans.—Take a quart of Lima beans, add two ounces of butter, four ounces of diced ham, a little sugar and salt, a good teaspoonful of flour, and a few sweet herbs to taste. Put in a paper bag with half a pint of water, seal up, and cook for an hour in a moderate oven.

Baked Potatoes.—Thoroughly wash twelve good-sized potatoes. Make a few small slits in them, but do not peel. Place in a paper bag, with one tablespoonful of water. Seal and cook thirty-five to fifty minutes, according to size.

Tomatoes.—Place six tomatoes in boiling water for twenty-five seconds. Peel, butter your paper bag, put in tomatoes with salt, pepper, a suspicion of sugar, and a small piece of butter. Put the bag on the broiler after sealing, and cook for twelve minutes in a hot oven.

Apples a la Duchesse.—Wash and dry ten large apples. Core them, put stick-cinnamon—only a bit—in the place of each core, and pour over them a tablespoonful of rum. Put in a buttered bag, and bake on the broiler thirty minutes. When quite done, dish up, remove the cinnamon, and fill the centers with jam—strawberry, raspberry, or apricot. Cover with stiffly whipped cream, sprinkle with chopped nuts, and serve, or set on ice till wanted. Use sweet apples and let them cool before adding the jam and cream.

Light the gas range eight minutes before beginning to cook, or open the draughts so the coal range will be hot. Put the roast on first, upon the lowest shelf. Put the apples upon the upper shelf, so as to leave room for the tomatoes beside them. As soon as the tomatoes are done, remove, set the bag in a plate, and stand where it will keep hot. Put the Lima beans in the vacant place—and when the apples are done, remove them and put on the potatoes. Thus, you will be able to have the cooking come out even, also to chill and season your apples before sitting down to table.

BEAN'S CANDIDACY.

Republicans of Bucks county are now claiming the Congressional nomination for their candidate, Oscar O. Bean. Mr. Bean was the first candidate in the race for this nomination in the Bucks-Montgomery district, and there is no longer any doubt but that he has the warm support of a large majority of the active and influential Republicans in the county.

The Bucks county Republicans also assert that Montgomery is recognizing the justice of their claim that Bucks is entitled at this time to the nomination. For eighteen years Montgomery has come up at each election with a handsome majority for Montgomery's Congressional candidate, and she believes this steadfast loyalty now entitles her to the nomination.

Apparently there is little disposition in Montgomery to dispute Beckel claim in regard to this nomination provided she produces the proper man. Republicans over in Bucks claim that Mr. Beckel candidacy fulfills this requirement. They say that the fact that never since the party has been in control in the county has it failed to place any man in public service who has not fully measured up to the requirements of the place. Mr. Bean has lived all his life in Bucks and Montgomery counties. His every interest is identical with that of the people of this district. As a practicing lawyer, Republican County Chairman, and managing editor of the county's leading newspaper, he has for many years been in intimate touch with public affairs. The people of his county believe Mr. Bean is well qualified to represent his district at Washington, and they believe also that he is to be made the Republican contender for this place.

CARS THROWN DOWN BANK

Misplaced Switch Caused Accident Near Hatboro Station.

An accident occurred at the railroad siding below Byberry avenue on Tuesday that resulted in wrecking two freight cars. The car shifter was at work and a brakeman gave a signal to the engineer that the switch was properly turned, when in fact this had not been done. Before the mistake was discovered two cars, a coal car and a big box car, went off the track and slid down the railroad embankment, quite high at that place. Both cars were badly splintered, but the wrecker managed to lift the coal car back to the rails. The attempt to move the box car failed on the first day's trial. It was after the train unloaded.

The damage to railroad equipment was considerable, but no one was hurt.

SNOW SPEEDING.

Fast Nags Race to the Lively Jingling of Sleigh Bells.

The second race event over the snow held on Hatboro's main street took place on Thursday afternoon. There were many lively heats and informal brushes between owners of fast nags from all around the country.

The course was laid over a half mile straight-a-way from the bridge at the Neely place, to the Paxson coal office. Among those who had fast steppers entered were: James Lyons, Chalkley Stackhouse, Newton Piney, H. Leedom, of Newtown; Roy Randall, Daniel Bray, George H. Yerkes, Dr. Davis, J. Norenburg, and others.

Stackhouse, Leedom, Bray and Lyons seemed to have the best of the brushes.

So pleased were the horsemen with the racing that they are endeavoring to arrange for a much bigger event this Saturday afternoon. They have the promise of the entry of many fast horses and some lively racing is looked for. In order to prevent any possibility of accident, the course will be policed by special officers and no doubt there will be many spectators.

MORE OR LESS WINTER—SURE

Friday was "Groundhog Day" and once more the superstitious will have a chance to jolly themselves into thinking winter is over or bemoan their fate that it is due to last six weeks longer. If the groundhog saw its shadow, it ducked into its hole again and winter stays on the job. If the day be dark and gloomy and no shadow distrubed his sensitized nerves, Brer Groundhog wanders away into the world and spring is due in short order. For so the old saying runs that many people admit the whole lot to be considerable interest in even if they don't actually, not actually you know, quite pin their faith to the prophesying qualities of the Arctomys Monax, which is the scientific name for that humble and harmless animal known as the woodchuck. The day was one of the kind, cloudy with peeps of sunshine, that permits everyone to interpret the outlook differently. We will have six weeks more of winter, or not, which?

MYSTERIOUS MILK TREATMENT.

The Day Dream of Veracious Correspondent.

The first monthly meeting of the New Year, was held by the Woodmont Milk Platform Association, membership being fully represented at the meeting.

The meeting was voted a success. One of the important features of the meeting was a vote of praise given to Mayor Blankenburg, of Philadelphia, for the retention of Director Neff.

While a year ago the association did not have any kindly feelings towards the Director, due to the stringent requirements regarding shipments of their lacteal product.

But after some careful political reconsidering, harmony was thoroughly established, and so tranquil has the situation become, that before, where it was necessary to use many pounds of ice, and spending hours of immersing the milk, to reach the temperature of shipment, now that has been abandoned.

Through the aforesaid influence scientific facts have been ascertained which used in conjunction with the occult science, has eliminated the worries of the shippers.

This special knowledge was imparted to the Association's personal inspector, who each morning before the arrival of the train, removed the lid from each can, and by the said scientific information in conjunction with deep mental impressions and passing the hands mysteriously over each can, brings same to desired temperature.

This of course has been accomplished, due largely to the intelligent life of the fluid. In an investigation, it was proven that the product of the Woodmont Association contained more animal life and life bearing germ product, than that shipped by any other nearby point.

It was due to the intelligent quality of this germ, that the cooling hypnotic influence was obtained.

One of the ding busted members had the audacity to remark, "T'was a good thing that most of the wells round about were old, and possessed more animal life, than the newer wells."

We might infer from his remark that he was trying certain laboratory experiments between the aqua produced by the wells and the lacteal fluid by his kine.

No stress was laid on this by the other members, due to the fact they do not want any reflection on the association.

It was also approved by the members that weekly statements or correspondence setting forth all interesting information be sent forward to the PUBLIC SPIRIT. So that the nearby shippers may appreciate and [illegible] the advancement of the association.

The association then voted Prof. W. Blythe, ex-member of association, the role of honorable recognition for his achievement and success as a corn raiser. We don't want the kind reader to assume the corn raising referred to was the hard-shelled skin product. Prof. is not a chiropodist. He is one of the brightest agriculturists in our parts.

Prof. Blythe received the vote in proper manner in which he kindly thanked the association in an address, after which the association surrendered individually to Prof. the little hammer used by them through the year of 1911.

James Lyons had his trotter out on Thursday at Hatboro in the sleighing races.

Mrs. J. Lyons, of Woodmont, is visiting friends in Sunbury and Harrisburg.

We are pleased to report that E. O. Mason, of Woodmont, who has been seriously ill is rapidly recovering.

Cris. Zimmerman recently purchased a fine iron gray horse, weighs 1180 pounds. Price of this horse ranged about 20 cents per pound. This has the beef trust beat.

THE NEIGHBORS.

Miss Alice Paul Talks on Suffrage for Women.

The Neighbors of Hatboro, had a meeting on Saturday, January 27th. Elizabeth R. Wood, the president, made several announcements. An important one being that on February 24th, when Miss Helen Varick Boswell gives a talk on "Everyday Life in the Canal Zone." The meeting is to be held in the Baptist church instead of the Sunday school room, and gentlemen are invited. A piano duet was rendered by Miss Clara MacNair and Miss Eleanor Fenton. Miss Alice Paul, of Moorestown, New Jersey, was next introduced. Perhaps the large audience expected to see some one quite different from the slight dark eyed young woman, who appeared on the platform and gave a most interesting and well delivered address on suffrage for Women. There were many present who were opposed to the movement or thought they were, but not one could find fault with the excellent arguments set forth by this lady-like young girl, showing why woman should have the right to vote if they desired it. She went back to 60 years ago when Lucretia Mott and a few other women at a meeting in West Chester asked for educational advantages for women and the liberty to enter the professions. They were looked on in horror that such a thing should be thought of. Yet all this has come to pass and much more that was not thought of at that time. Miss Paul said she had read through every bill before the legislature last year, over 600 and they were all on commercial subjects, but reforms in which women are specially interested can only be reached by the ballot, such as child labor, temperance, the white slave traffic, etc.

After the address Miss Louisa Milnor played a piano solo, Miss Gountner requested Miss Paul to give some of her experiences in England. She responded by giving a brief history of the suffrage movement in England and said that the articles in the newspapers had been greatly exaggerated. The prison stories were in the main true. The women who had been arrested for trying to get petitions to the attention of the Cabinet demanded that they be treated as political criminals and be placed in the part of the prison given to that class. When they were put in the poorest cells they refused to eat and by perseverance succeeded in gaining their point. All these things were a revelation to the audience and Miss Paul received a vote of thanks. At the close of the meeting tea was served.

Shook will give a talk on the life of the great writer and there will be readings from his works by Rev. F. C. Colby and Miss Goentner and probably others. Also music. Everyone invited.

FIREMEN BANQUET.

Members of the Montgomery County Association Meet at Hatboro.

The second annual banquet of the Montgomery County Firemen's Association held at Moore's Inn on Saturday night was quite a success. Covers were laid for some 120 participants, members of the Association, which comprises nearly all the fire companies of the lower end of Montgomery county.

Howard A. Foster, of Glenside, acted as toast-master and after the dinner had started, called on Paul Jones, president of the Association, who made a very able address, and afterward was presented with a handsome bunch of flowers by the Jenkintown firemen, Sheriff Charles Swartz, being the spokesman.

Beside a handsome souvenir menu appropriate to the occasion, there was a song sheet, containing eight of the up-to-date and patriotic songs. Between the courses the toast-master called on a large number of persons and the singing of the songs brought forth the spirit of good fellowship and every one seemed to be enjoying himself to the fullest extent.

Resolutions were passed thanking the committee, who had charge of the affair, and Proprietor Moore, who so ably acted the part of host to such a large number.

A number of visiting firemen were present, some from Philadelphia, who gave interesting talks and experiences in regard to fighting of fires.

James Butler, of Jenkintown, told a number of funny stories in dialect. Those who made addresses were: Charles Salin, of Delaware county; Michael Walsh and George Westmire, of Philadelphia; Samuel Craig, of Delaware county; William J. Devine and Chief Haywood, of Ambler; Andrew Graham, Sheriff Swartz, Hon. David Fitzgerald, of Jenkintown; Chief Franks, of Fort Washington; Warren M. Cornell and Penrose Robinson, of Hatboro.

The officers of the association are: President, Paul Jones; vice president, Andrew Graham; secretary, Howard A. Foster; treasurer, William J. Devine. THE FEBRUARY AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

The February American Magazine begins with Abraham Lincoln and ends with Abraham Lincoln, but in between there is a great variety of good reading that has nothing to do with Lincoln at all.

The magazine leads off with a wonderful fiction story entitled "The Bust of Lincoln,"—a story in which strange things happen to an old miser and a young pair of lovers. The concluding contribution to the magazine is a lively discussion in the department known as "The Interpreter's House" as to what Abraham Lincoln would do with certain public questions if he were in the White House in the year 1912.

In between this story and this discussion are such features as an Arnold Bennett story, an article by Ida M. Tarbell on women, a Phoebe and Ernest story by Inez Haynes Gillmore, an Emma McChesney story by Edna Ferber, La Follette's Autobiography, the first of a new series of articles entitled "The Man in the Cage," a story by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, a new political story by C. S. Raymond, a wonderful little surprise story by Ed Howe, a splendid piece of comic writing on journalism by Kin Hubbard, and several other fresh and lively pieces of story-telling, reporting and comment.

Altogether, the February American Magazine is a notable number—full of facts, ideas, good fiction and humor.

MAN HURT; WAGON WRECKED

Grade Crossing Accident at Newtown.

Jesse N. Worthington, of Newtown, was very seriously hurt and his wife had a very narrow escape from death, Friday night, when their carriage was struck by a railroad train not far from their home.

They were struck by the 6.50 train from Newtown for Philadelphia, which they failed to see, as snow was falling.

Just as the horses got on the track, Mrs. Worthington saw the headlight and cried, "O Jesse! Here comes the train!" She jumped and Mr. Worthington whipped up the horses. The animals got across the track but the engine struck the wagon and knocked it into splinters and Mr. Worthington was thrown some distance.

Assistance was gotten as soon as possible. It was found that Mrs. Worthington and the horses had escaped, but that Mr. Worthington and an ankle sprained, an arm injured and his chest crushed. It is feared that he may be injured internally.

I wish to be simple, honest, natural, frank, clean in mind and clean in body, unaffected—ready to say "I do not know," if so it be, to meet all men on an absolute equality—to face any obstacle and meet every difficulty unafraid and unabashed. I wish to live without hate, whim, jealousy, envy or fear. I wish others to live their lives, too—up to their highest, fullest and best. To that end I pray that I may never meddle, dictate, interfere, give advice that is not wanted, nor assist when my services are not needed. If I can help people, I will do it by giving them a chance to help themselves; and if I can uplift or inspire, let it be by example, inference and suggestion, rather than by injunction and dictation. SOME MISTAKES IN POULTRY

Too Many Beginners Start on Too Large Scale—Most Common Error Is "Learning Too Fast."

It is well for the beginner to adopt the advice of men who are veterans in the service, in order that they may avoid many of the stumbling blocks, says the Poultry Journal.

Too many novices start on too large a scale. They are not content to begin at the bottom round of the ladder and gradually climb to the top. That is too slow for them. If blessed with sufficient capital they are pretty sure to start on a large scale. Without experience, is it any wonder that they do not succeed?"

But this is not the only cause of failure with the beginner. The others might briefly be stated as having too much land; buildings too scattered, entailing too much unnecessary labor; the breed or breeds selected not being suitable for the purpose intended; house not built upon the sanitary plan; too much changing of the bill of fare; unmindful of small details; harboring too much unprofitable stock; carelessness in caring for ailing birds; relying too much on hired help, and learning too fast.

It is a waste of money to buy too much land. From 5 to 10 acres is sufficient for the largest kind of plant.

A general mistake is the continual changing of the bill of fare. There should be one system of feeding and that regularly followed. The bill of fare should contain the greatest variety possible, but the system should not be changed. New articles of food should not be given to the exclusion of others until the fowls have had a chance to become acquainted with them. All additions or changes should be gradually made. If the fowls are doing well on what they are getting, no change should be made at all.

Probably the most common error is "learning too fast." It is a noteworthy fact that, as a rule, by the close of the first year the beginner forms the opinion that he knows it all. Thirty years spent in the poultry yard has taught the writer that he has much yet to learn. There is always something new turning up.

The wise man reads, studies, practices and investigates, thus daily adding to his store of knowledge.

SUCCESS IN TURKEY RAISING

Inadvisable for One to Attempt to Rear Large Fowls Unless Abundance of Space Available.

It is inadvisable for any one to attempt turkey rearing unless they have abundance of space, for these birds, more perhaps than any other denizens of the poultry yard, are unable to bear confinement. Sundry attempts have been made to rear them in limited runs, but as yet the effort has not met with success. Those who are favored with space will find turkey rearing profitable, provided that they can secure attention being given to the birds.

Gobbler and Hen.

COMBATING LICE IN CHICKS

Small Quantity of Olive Oil Rubbed on Fowl's Head Will Prove Quite Effectual.

If fowls are healthy, the premises kept clean, and a dust bath or ashes provided, lice rarely get the upper hand, it being through the brood hens, transmitting them to the chickens, that most harm ensues. A hen with many or few lice on her when sitting transmits them to the chickens immediately they are hatched. They are to be found stationary on the chicken's head, above the beak and eyes, and in a few days when they get more plentiful, are to be found behind and on top of head and throat. A simple and effective treatment adopted by the government station in New South Wales is to place a small quantity of olive oil in a saucer, and the day after hatching dip the finger in the oil and thoroughly rub it into the fluff of the chicken's head and under the throat. This will kill the lice if present and if repeated the second or third day there will be little fear of any escaping. When a week or ten days old the chickens should be examined again and if any of the vermin are found at this age a little kerosene can be added to the olive oil. It is best to annoint all chickens with the oil immediately after they are hatched, such being a sure preventive of the scourge.

OBITUARY

CHARLES G. KNIGHT.

The funeral of the late Charles G. Knight was held last Wednesday from his late residence at Churchville, with interment at Penn Cemetery, Somerton. The attendance was large.

Mr. Knight died the previous Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock at his home. He had been ill for about a year. For several months his condition was very serious, but early in December he was able to get around for a time. Very shortly afterward, however, he suffered a relapse.

Mr. Knight was one of the best known and most highly respected men in lower Bucks county and was a leading spirit in his home township. He was the eldest son of Jonathan Knight and was born September 2, 1835, in Southampton township, near the boundary line between Bucks and Montgomery counties. He was reared upon the old home farm in that township, and obtained his education in the public schools there. He continued to live with his father until twenty-two years of age when his father purchased for him a farm of 120 acres in Northampton township, near Rockaville, to which he then removed. Though of recent years he resided in Churchville he still owned the farm and kept it in a high state of cultivation.

After removing to Northampton township, Mr. Knight was continuously and actively interested in Republican politics and held various positions of public trust and responsibility in both township and county affairs. He was a school director for eighteen years, justice of the peace for seven years, supervisor for two years, and county treasurer from 1902 to 1905.

Mr. Knight wedded Elizabeth Cornell, a daughter of James C. Cornell, of Holland, who survives him with the following children: J. L. Knight, of Trenton Junction, N. J.; Theodore Knight, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Paul Markley, of Camden, N. J. A brother, Jonathan Knight, of Chestnut Hill also survives him.

About 10 days ago she suffered a very severe attack of acute indigestion and on Saturday morning another attack followed, resulting in her death.

The deceased was the daughter of the late Solomon Cleaver and Lydia Shoemaker, of Springhouse, and was born July 30, 1830. She was married to Joseph M. E. Ambler on February 16, 1854, and in that year he was engaged in farming the property now owned by Isaac E. Ambler. In 1856 they removed to Springhouse, leasing the Cleaver farm, operating it till 1866, when Mr. Cleaver died. Mr. Ambler then purchased the farm and successfully continued thereon until 1876, when he practically retired from business pursuits.

In 1876 Mr. Ambler purchased from Charles T. Hallowell the property on Ridge and Forest avenues, Ambler. This property had only just previously been purchased from the late David J. Ambler. Mr. Ambler died there on April 7, 1895.

Mrs. Ambler continued to make this her home for many years thereafter, making changes to the property and converting it into a very desirable residence. A year or more ago she rented the house and went to Plymouth Meeting where she spent several months, later going with Dr. and Mrs. Galbraith to their farm near Jeffersonville.
